A new Washington Post-ABC News poll from December found that 56 percent of Americans believed the nation's foreign policy was "on the right track" with the 2014 midterm elections around the corner. With 44 percent disagreeing, it is one of the most divided we've seen in over 20 years. There is evidence, of course, that a presidential election is on the way in 2016. But at this moment in history, with U.S. involvement in Afghanistan, Ukraine, Syria, Iraq and the Ebola crisis seemingly turning against us, it is safe to say that major military actions have Americans scratching their heads wondering about how it came to this. The United States continues to be embroiled in civil wars or armed conflicts in Afghanistan, Iraq, Syria, Libya, Yemen, and Central African Republic. As I pointed out a few days ago, ISIS is also expanding its franchise to some African nations: ISIS is active in Libya, Nigeria, Sudan, Somalia, Egypt, Tunisia, Lebanon, Syria, Afghanistan, Iraq, Yemen and Iran. There are no doubt ramifications for the spread of the extremist group in the global community. The intelligence community must continue to assess the situation in real time and take full advantage of resources at their disposal. But it is clear that Obama inherited a mess when he took office. This response (or non-response) at the critical time in Syria has already made things worse. The time to respond with a more robust response was after the Syrian crisis had grown larger, destabilized neighboring Iraq, etc. etc. If we move too late, many of the gains made against ISIS could be lost. The Syrian refugee crisis has not gone unnoticed by the American public: Meanwhile, the entire world is watching to see how President Obama responds to Syria. I wrote last week about the growing number of refugees. In November 2014, there were 12.1 million refugees. And there is no end in sight to the number of people displaced within their own country by war and chaos. Last month, Bill Clinton talked about the tragic situation in Syria and said, "We have to respond to the crisis." Clinton said: "The world is watching us and waiting for us to respond." What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.4.1)?

The Trump administration is considering placing sanctions on U.S. companies and individuals involved with the construction of Iranian gas pipelines, Reuters reported. The decision was apparently approved by the Treasury Department and could be announced by the end of May, the news agency reported Tuesday, citing "four sources familiar with the matter." The new sanctions could target entities that were integral to a series of gas deals between Iran and China worth over $20 billion. The projects broke ground in 2016 and are due to be completed by late 2021. Under sanctions tied to the Iranian nuclear deal, the U.S. made it increasingly harder for non-U.S. companies to do business with Iran. But the Trump administration has said it would roll back some of the restrictions and allow U.S. businesses to benefit from the deals. To do so, the Treasury Department is considering a policy that would for the first time target foreign companies directly for financing projects tied to Iran's oil and natural gas sector. Mortgage debt collection has dropped 20% in the U.S. last year, the world's biggest mortgage lender reported Tuesday. Homeowners continue to face signs of an economic slowdown, but the rate of defaulting loans has actually declined. (Crain's New York) — Homeowners in the United States today face a stark choice, facing rising interest rates, plummeting home values and a faltering economy, or delaying home improvements that have been on the horizon. Due to higher wages and rising living costs, home improvement has become the top household consumer in the U.S., according to the Consumer Expenditure Survey from the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Home improvement spending has grown at a yearly rate of nearly 3%, but if annual growth maintains at that pace, it will surpass new home purchases as the top spending category in 2018, when they are roughly tied. (Reuters) — A military dispute near a disputed border territory between China and India killed at least two people on Monday, Indian officials said, while another occurred between India and Bangladesh, both of which claim the area. The incidents were the latest troubles to strike volatile border areas between countries with differing views on what countries do or do not own, and how the lines are drawn in the aftermath of Britain's departure from the European Union in March. The annual line-drawing exercise known as the "demarcation of boundaries" has triggered clashes across the world including the Himalayan border between India and China
