In a conversation with a friend I know we were agreeing on something. He goes "Hey you don't realize this but you and I disagree..." he didnt name names but he was basically talking about two people I know who are not people I would normally associate with, but they are good people and he didn't mean anything bad by it so I let it go. I knew something was up because he is usually very smart, but I just let it slide and the next day I'm thinking about it and that's when I looked at the conversation and started writing this down. Every time I read this I have a little chuckle over how offended I was to begin with, but everything was okay in the end and no one was hurt and I'm still feeling some anger, but I'm wondering what I should have done?

Should I have told him I wasn't ok with what he said? Should I have said something? Should I have brought this up in a private conversation? I'm not sure where I should take this discussion. I'm sort of in an awkward situation and not sure if I'm supposed to to be in this kind of conversation. A: Chiding him is pointless. He's only repeating something you said. You could explain to the people you referenced, but that would probably be offensive. If you were in my position, I'd be pissed off if
