I've tried this out on this site too, but with less success. I posted a simple question in which I couldn't produce anything more than a few short paragraphs, but the first line was "Hi, I'm doing an assignment on...". Initially, it got 16 up-votes, but has subsequently been down-voted along with half of the other questions on this list. Is this a general trend in the microblogging/social networking scene where people are discouraged from posting interesting messages, or just this site? - The first line of your post says it all - you can't make any kind of meaningful contribution. - Disclaimer: just recently registered on this site, so let me know if you think I should do something specific to get good upvotes.Q: creating elements of JSON message (from SOAP) by hand I have a method that returns an xml message as JSON. I am getting this JSON message from an SOAP endpoint. The problem is that I need to build up the message from the JSON as follows: Get the elements of JSON message (i.e get first node and do a loop) append values to those elements. I used JSON.Net library for the job and I did like this but I am pretty sure I am doing it wrong and
