A Light Pattern on a Floor Translates As a Picture In this gallery we showcase lighting art work which uses light patterns to create a picture on a floor. The lighting art and installation is part of a room design project for a private residence. This is the first time that we have seen a photo-realistic image projected on a floor, but it isn't the first time we've seen light-based art. Artists have been creating sculptures, paintings and drawings with light beams for years.1.

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a fixture for connecting a computer keyboard or mouse to a portable computer, and more particularly, to a device for fixing a keyboard to a tabletop or desktop of a computer without requiring the use of screws or other tools.

2. Discussion of the Related Art There are different ways in which to attach a keyboard to a computer. These different techniques include: using suction cups, using magnets, using a fastener, attaching the keyboard using screws, and using clips.

Suction cups are typically used for personal computers. However, they are large, cumbersome, and inefficient for use with a portable computer. Additionally, the amount of force required to attach the keyboard using a suction cup is often problematic, especially when the computer is placed upon a surface that is not flat.

Furthermore, the attachment of the keyboard to the computer is often messy since the suction cup can easily slip off the surface when the computer is placed down.

Magnetically-attached keyboards use magnets to attach the keyboard to the computer. However, the keyboards are typically not very steady, which leads to problems with the portable computer.

Further, the magnets, due to their strong force of attraction, are very difficult to remove and are not practical when the computer is placed on any surface other than a flat, smooth surface. In order to
