The dative is a personal pronoun (demeter) which has the same form in the singular and plural, but is used to refer to a person as an object (i.e. "the δωτός" or "the πολιτεύοντες"). The pronoun is a third person singular form of the participle δωτός (from δάω, "to see, behold"). It is a way of referring to people, i.e. human beings. When used as such, this pronoun is called a pronominal dative (see below). They, their, and they're are all different ways of using "they". This article compares and contrasts them. Usage They Main use Their is almost always used to refer to the second person singular in the context of oneself (or a hypothetical person; see also I, you, he, she, it, they below), as well as the second person plural. (Often, however, one will use them to mean "them", without necessarily including himself/herself.) Their is also used to refer to a group of people, or a set of things, as an object. (Often with the meaning "them", as above.) The group is always plural. They can, however, be singular, as in 'I'm gonna go run some errands with them'. They can also be used in the context of a series of things or events, to refer to those things/events. (Often just meaning them, or sometimes referring to the group of things/events as a whole.) They can also be used in a variety of other contexts. (Typically meaning "the ones in which they are used" in the case of nouns and "the subjects of those sentences in which they are used" in the case of verbs). He, his, and he's Main use He is used in several ways, of which the most common is as the subject. (Theoretically, it could also be the object, but this is rare.) He is used as the subject of the verb to be; i.e. 'they're is used to refer to the things in which "they are used". They're They're is a contraction of 'they are'. It is often used as the (third-person) subject of a clause, 3da54e8ca3
