That said, those who have taken up the challenge and have created content for this platform, have been doing an amazing job. Share this article on LinkedIn Email Mark Webber says his Formula 1 team is "way behind" rivals in terms of straight-line speed and believes the introduction of a 2014 regulation change was a costly mistake. After the Canadian Grand Prix, where Lotus and Red Bull enjoyed their best race of 2013 on Sunday, Webber is skeptical that his team can catch up after many consecutive years of stringing together bad results. "We're way behind in terms of straight-line speed," he told AUTOSPORT. "We aren't quick enough on corners and the aero balance isn't there. It hasn't been since I was on the F1 world championship team. "It's not like you can do something suddenly. We're a team with several years of bad decisions and it's taken us a long time to get to this point. The main reason we have a problem is because every time we decide to make a change to aero, the level of development they do f30f4ceada
