Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., said Tuesday that he was eager to see what former Republican New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie would say in hearings this week with the Senate Intelligence Committee, including whether he was ordered to shut down lanes at the George Washington Bridge as a political retribution to the mayor of Fort Lee, N.J. "I'm anxious to hear the testimony, hear what the former governor has to say," Sanders, a 2016 Democratic presidential candidate, told MSNBC's "The Rachel Maddow Show." The New York Post, whose columns Christie endorsed in the 2016 GOP presidential primary, reported Monday that Christie had hired President Donald Trump's personal attorney, Marc Kasowitz, to investigate allegations that the real estate mogul's campaign coordinated with the agency behind the lane closures that led to the George Washington Bridge scandal. Christie, who served as U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New Jersey before being elected governor, is a friend of Trump's and mentioned it himself in "Hacks." But he did not mention Trump's name once in an interview with the Post. In response, Christie pushed back on the reports, telling the paper, "I am not going to be used as a pawn in anybody's 3da54e8ca3
