Dorothea Bartels Dorothea Bartels (6 September 1869 – 13 November 1954) was a German historian who specialized in women's history. Born in Dresden, she studied as a schoolgirl under the tutelage of Edith Stein, a Dominican nun who became one of the 20th century's greatest historians of religious persecution. Dorothea Bartels later studied history at the University of Göttingen and was active as a writer from 1904 onward, when she began publishing a number of works on medieval and early modern women and women's history. Her influential works included Einleitung in die Geschichte der Frau (Introduction to the History of Women, 1911), which examined women's history in terms of social and religious factors, a theme that would gain widespread attention in the following decades. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for producing a semiconductor device using a crystalline silicon film, and in particular to a method for producing a semiconductor device using a crystalline silicon film which is epitaxially grown over an insulating substrate.

2. Description of the Related Art Recently, small and fast elements have been more strongly demanded to a semiconductor device such as a thin film transistor (hereinafter referred to as a TFT), which is formed over a glass substrate or the like. To improve the TFT performance, it is required to form a crystalline silicon film which is good in crystallinity. The crystalline silicon film to be used is generally formed by a heating process, that is, a thermal process. However, the heating process is very disadvantageous in view of the productivity and cost. In addition, the heating process can hardly be applied to the process of fabricating a thin film transistor which is applied to a liquid crystal display. To avoid the disadvantage, the crystalline silicon film is formed by using an excimer laser annealing process. The excimer laser annealing process is a process in which an amorphous silicon film formed over an insulating substrate is melted by the irradiation of the excimer laser and the silicon is crystallized and solidified again. According to this process, it is possible to form a crystalline silicon film in a low-temperature process. Therefore, the productivity of the TFT can be improved. The excimer laser annealing process, however, has a problem in that it is inferior in reproducibility because the irradiated portion of the amorphous silicon film is melted and recrystallized every time. Moreover, the crystalline silicon film formed by using the excimer laser annealing process has a lot of grain boundaries because a crystal is grown from an amorphous nucleus. Therefore, it is very difficult to form the crystalline silicon film having a large area uniformly. A silicon film which is
