X-Ray CT apparatus using the second derivative of a projection data in order to image tissues in a living body includes an X-ray detector having plural detector elements and an image reconstruction apparatus that performs an iterative reconstruction based on a reconstruction parameter. The reconstruction parameter can be, for example, weight of the image reconstruction processing. There has been proposed a technique for determining the reconstruction parameter by comparing results of the iterative reconstruction and a photographically taken image of the same portion of the subject (for example, see Patent Literature 1). In Patent Literature 1, first, an X-ray CT image of a test phantom is generated, and a reconstruction parameter is determined based on a change in CT value when the CT value of the test phantom is changed. Then, based on the determination result, another test phantom is irradiated with X rays, and an X-ray CT image of the test phantom is generated. With this, the reconstruction parameter is determined again, and a relationship between CT value of the test phantom and CT value of the X-ray CT image of the test phantom is measured. Furthermore, based on the measured relationship, a CT value of the test phantom in the X-ray CT image is calculated to perform region of interest (ROI) setting and the like. Thus, it is determined whether or not the reconstruction parameter can be optimized..6 (95% CI 10.0 to 20.3) in patients with mild OSA. The increments in each outcome were similar when adjusted for age, baseline comorbidities and stroke risk factors, and then adjusted for baseline cardiovascular risk factors only.
