Dominic Minor has a new television home, and the hype behind his debut episode of "Channel Zero" was perhaps a little overblown. "Channel Zero," which aired its pilot on Thursday on the FX channel, takes place in a postapocalyptic world dominated by a disembodied voice called The White Rose, a century after a nuclear holocaust. The story is told by a young woman named Georgia who, in her mid-20s, finds that she is part of a growing cadre of "Channel Zero" viewers who can be transported into and out of the world of the show by means of a TV called the CHANNEL ZERO. I won't lie: Like many of you, I'm hoping "Channel Zero" turns out to be a great show. That said, the actual pilot episode was a bit of a mess, and was only saved by the arrival of a brilliant performance by Anthony Edwards. The show is based on an old short story by the Canadian writer Scott Derrickson, who won an Oscar for "The Exorcist." It's been adapted for TV by Derrickson and Ed Wax, and it involves an exploration of the thought process of people who have actually watched somebody else watching "Channel Zero." The pilot opens with Georgia in bed, hearing a voice on the television. Georgia starts to believe that her boyfriend Jim (played by Noah Bean) is possessed by the spirit of a Japanese man named Mr. Noybaryo (Riki Lindhome). When Georgia's divorced mother (Joy Bryant) enters the room, Georgia explains that she saw Noybaryo in her home, and that someone "told me I should talk to my mother." Mother and daughter begin to watch "Channel Zero," and the storyline proceeds along with the audience's surprise as the show quickly reveals that it really is happening. But just as the teenaged Georgia begins to understand that her mother could be reading her diary, she herself is apparently transported into the show, which becomes even more apparent when Jim, who enters the room. This should sound strange. The point of "Channel Zero" is that someone can enter a TV show, and if that

It works fine in Chrome, but in IE and Firefox the handler never fires after I release the mouse button.

function handleScroll(evt) { console.log(evt); } window.onmousemove = function(evt) { handleScroll(evt); }; A: You're listening for the wrong event. You want to use window.onmousemove = function(evt) { handleScroll(evt); }; The onmousemove event is fired when the mouse is moved but not released. You probably want to use either the onmousewheel or onmousewheelstop events. There's a good Q&A that covers this here 6 +
