This page was last revised on 8 May 2016, at which time there were 993 page links. - "Text" or "Raw Text" are two distinct kinds of files. Much like raw sources are the undigitized, unparsed, and unformatted original data used in research, bibliographic files are the documented, parsed, and formatted database or collection of data used to create and deliver text-based documents. This distinction is not entirely clear-cut, however, since certain types of raw data can be repurposed into bibliographic files, notably the use of survey data and metadata for statistical analysis, coupled with spreadsheet calculations (further analysis may be imported into Excel or Excel-like software, such as Google Sheets, to create new bibliographic data). "Text" or "Raw Text" may also refer to the written record of oral speech, or verbal or written documents, and their associated media for publication or dissemination. - Title Name Code Description of Business Directory Education, Florida FL Is the dominant party. Request State, Federal, and Local Accessibility Information on a Specific Assembly District and International catalogue In communication and media studies, the international catalogue is a document of publications and research results on a specific field of knowledge (such as communication) produced by academics of universities and research institutions outside the country where the institution is located. In many cases the creation of such a catalogue is a mandate of the institution and it comprises both the catalogued publications and the institution's own outputs. The international catalogue contains articles which are not (or not only) included in the domestic or regional catalogues. These cover subjects which are the core of the institution's research or they are of interest to all the institutions that are part of the international communication network. International catalogues, usually produced by editorial offices, are also known as international research catalogues. The main goal of the publication is to create an overview of the research output of institutions that are a part of the communication network, and to offer these research results to anybody interested in a particular field. Therefore, the scope of an international catalogue may be broader than that of a domestic catalogue, which may focus on subjects that are often of local importance, but are less interesting for the rest of the world, such as local publishing houses.
