• SaveQ: How to send mail through a non-local server? I have a friend who has a server in their house. I want to send a mail to my gmail, but the pop3 server at my friend's house is localhost. I want to open the gmail web site through the internet. When i do that, the web address is correct and I can send the mail. But if i set the gmail address to his pop3 server hostname instead of the pop3.gmail.com hostname, i can't send the mail. A: You can send mail through your friend's POP3 server using Google's SMTP service. Every POP3 provider (GMail is just one example) offers a similar service. In your case, POP3 server is a mere mail transport service. It doesn't hold any data, so your friend can easily set up an external mail box for you. Only requirement from your side is to be able to send mail through your friend's server, so you have to use his credentials to authenticate your account. Serum interleukin-6 concentration
