What I want is to have return Redirect("/Home"); Which will open the URL as /Home but without firing the full postback. Is this possible? A: You could use RedirectToAction and set ViewState to false. If you want to redirect to another action with an entirely different view, you can use ViewContext.HttpContext.GetOwinContext().Get(myRoute); if you're on MVC 6 or above. return View("MyViewName"); should work fine with RedirectToAction. This invention relates to a novel polyester resin composition. More particularly, this invention relates to a polyester resin composition with good mechanical and thermal properties which is excellent in compatibility with a polyamide resin and in the thermostability and a process for preparing the same. Polyesters such as polyethylene terephthalate are known in the art as excellent resins which are excellent in the mechanical and thermal properties and which are capable of providing molded articles which are practically useful in various applications. Yes, it could be said that a college degree can sometimes make a person more "employable," in the sense that we have a better chance of getting a good job. But what about a post-graduate degree? If a college degree can (sometimes) make you more employable, what about a master's or a Ph.D.? Isn't that even more valuable? Not really, says a new study in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. Here's the gist of the authors' argument: A person's future earnings depend more on the combination of their education and their skills than on their specific education or their specific skills. There are four very specific skills that are more important in determining a person's earnings
