Introducing the gameplay:

In Sword Art Online: Lost Song, you clear the game not by beating battles but by accepting defeat gracefully. So, basically, there are no rounds when you will be fighting the monsters. Instead, only after the monsters are defeated, you defeat the monsters' bosses.

In Sword Art Online: Lost Song, you must enhance the skills of both the protagonist, who is your avatar, and the monsters you fight. Because once the monsters are defeated and your lowest score goes down, you will be brought to the next stage where you fight even stronger enemies.

To defeat all the monsters, the player must avoid the various ultra strong enemies being actively attacked by the monsters, and the monster's attacks and monsters' skills must be dealt carefully.

Furthermore, there are optional dungeons and monsters. Optional dungeons are usually set by the guilds in the game that are recorded in the game's file, but there are also special dungeons that are not recorded and contain ultra hard monsters.

In Sword Art Online: Lost Song, the main characters help other clients who have already defeated the monsters. This system allows players to receive equipment and other items that can be used in the game, but as such items are not put in the start menus, instead they are put in special shrines where you receive them. Items stored in the shrine can be equipped at the Shrines.

Every character consists of three main skills. These are basic combat skills and support skills that can be upgraded along with the quality of equipment you Play and enjoy..Moritz Hagenbeck Moritz Hagenbeck (12 October 1797 – 3 March 1856) was a German zoologist, born in Frankfurt (Oder). He studied medicine at the universities of Bonn, Würzburg and Leipzig, afterwards proceeding to the University of Berlin. In 1825 he became a member of the Royal Society in London. As a collector and dealer of animals and insects, he visited several countries (Great Britain, Italy, South Africa and Brazil) and amassed an extensive collection of natural history specimens, including over 150,000. These were given to the Museum für Naturkunde in Berlin. The collection also contained hundreds of skin heads, skeletons and stuffed animals, and on 29 August 1838, Hagenbeck was the first to establish the 'Hagenbeck-Museum' (Hagenbeck Museum of Natural History) in Berlin. He is regarded as a founder of the field of practical taxonomy, and was for a while an editor of the journal, which he had founded with his brother Ernst Eduard Hagenbeck in 1833. However, in November 1844 he permanently left this position, having fallen out with some of the other editors, and was very critical of the journal's publication policy. In drilling wells for oil and gas, a casing string is usually installed in the borehole during the drilling phase of the well, such as during the drilling stage of the well. The casing is string will be set downhole and cemented into place as the wellbore is drilled. The wellbore is drilled using a drill bit attached to the lower end of a drillstring, which is suspended and rotated from a rig at the surface. The drilling operation proceeds by rotating the drillstring at the surface to cause the drill bit attached to the lower end of the drillstring to rotate. Such drilling operations will oftentimes include cementing using borehole fluids, such as oil, gas or water, in conjunction with high cost cement and high-cost additives used to facilitate cement systems. Drilling fluids are used during both directional drilling and drilling and are not only used to build up the well to facilitate the drilling, but to also maintain wellbore pressures to keep the well safely shut-in and in place. As the well nears the end of its useful life for a particular formation, then the borehole fluids and/or cased wellbores are selectively abandoned or flushed out by surface pumping and/or pumping downhole tools. However, before there is a chance to abandon the well, the well is usually has to be re-opened and new wellbore fluid is taken in. This is done to facilitate any subsequent remedial work. Downhole circulating tools are examples of such tools. One such circulating tool comprises a power pack, which powers tools at the bottom of the drillstring, including a mud motor. The mud motor is typically in line with the drillstring and will use the circulating fluid to rotate the drillstring and any attached tools. Although the circulating fluid will be pumped down from the surface through the casing and along the outside of the drillstring and actuate the motor and rotate the drillstring, there is a need for the motor
