"When you bite into the heart of an enemy, blood gushes out and its body collapses. With this technique, you can easily land critical hits. But once you use this technique, your blood will be drained. Do you want to have your enemy collapse? Therefore, practice this technique on enemies that you consider to be strong enemies. On the other hand, when you block attacks, you can avoid the attacks of the enemies. Press the [Y] button to block attacks. Blocking this technique will also prevent you from getting hit by magic, but you will not become immune to enemy attacks, so you should only block attacks that you are unable to avoid. When you block attacks by pressing the [Y] button, your enemy's magical power will be drained. In the case of using the [Y] button, you can also hit enemies that you already blocked, so you should ensure you always block attacks when you press the [Y] button. By pressing the [X] button, you can automatically block attacks. This is very effective, and you can easily deal with a large number of enemies. If you cannot attack after using the [X] button, your energy will decrease and you will be weakened. By pressing the [X] button, use the technique that produces the best results, and defend yourself." Q: HTML5 localStorage Do localStorage only store variables or their values? If it does only store their values, how can I convert my strings into integers or floats? A: As you suspected, localStorage only stores strings, and only strings that are under 127 bytes in length. So you would need to do some string manipulation to convert a value to a number, but the basic logic would be as follows:

int a; a = (int)localStorage.getItem("mystring"); or float a; a = (float)localStorage.getItem("myfloat");

That would return the string, in your example, to an integer. That's pretty much all you can do with localStorage. Hope that helps, Chenos. A: String → int. String → float. The first one is easy. The second one seems to be more involved. You would need to first: convert the string into an integer remove the leading/trailing zeros push the result onto an array then convert that array into a float Here's a JavaScript function that will do the conversion for you: function convertToNumber(str) { if(str.indexOf('.')!= -1) { // decimal return parseFloat(str); } else { // integer return parseInt(str, 10); } } If you want to convert anything to a number, that's the function to call.
