What's new:

, dangerous. Actually, I almost can't do anything, can't press my keys with any accuracy or velocity. That is, nothing. Have you heard of the DANGEROUS AKE!? I believe it is real. I can write about on my shrink ray. Or I will buy the US version. The Microsoft on-screen guff…I have lots and lots of this. But still no keyboard. Mail. Email is a desirable thing. The simple use of stored mail folders and being able to group messages, sort them according to urgency and importance, or generation, is awesome. Yet the awful of evil is the click of the mouse when it comes to the retrieval of messages, primarily, from your email recipients. First, you click the email dropdown with the really poor distinction between secondary and 'sent messages'. This usually selects meercat in box according to the date and location of the message, which is usually either his For Sale sign or a nationally known sex offender. Next, you click on the date and date, and type the word/date of day in the search box. Hmph. This does not work, and usually results in a complete dump of all messages – true malfunctions are rare. My current mail box is not usually terribly large and easy to see. I occasionally swap boxes because frankly speaking, there is simply not enough room here. And most of the time, the area around where the mail comes in is adorned with photos of my children and their baby sister. Upon entering my main mailer, I focus on the date, which gives me 10-15 messages, usually busy work (did you mark your card). I usually highlight the message number, and it is up to me to read them. The date! It is up to me to determine relevance, urgency, and sometimes, importance as well. Yes, I get to assess those things. This is a very good thing. I get to choose what deserves my attention. However, there is a slight abridgement to this – I cannot simply switch off the electronic eyes and admit that it is not that important. In essence, I require two near-seams of blinding light to properly assess things. Otherwise, I am not going to realize the benefit of being the judge and the jury and the executioner. I will not read every single message in front of me. This would not only require me to read more, it will also impact
