The code is: `$id = 5; $pwd = "secret"; $table = "data"; $url = "D:\xampp\xampp\htdocs\remote"; $url3 = "D:\xampp\xampp\htdocs\admin\data.php"; $db = mysqli_connect("localhost","root",""); $db3 = mysqli_connect("localhost","root",""); $update = mysqli_query($db, "UPDATE $table SET Password='$pwd' WHERE id = $id"); if($update!= false) { header("Location:../admin.php?quiz=yes"); exit(); } else { mysqli_close($db); echo "update not properly"; }` The update query seems to work but only the first row is being updated, all the following ones are not. Can someone please help me out? A: You are not using mysqli prepared statements, which would allow you to avoid SQL injection and other potential security vulnerabilities. `$db3 = mysqli_connect("localhost", "root", "", "test_db", 3306); // Escape your values $id = intval(5); $pwd = mysqli_real_escape_string($db3, "secre@t"); // Prepare statement $query = "UPDATE test_table SET password =? WHERE id =?"; // Bind your values mysqli_stmt_bind_param($query, "ss", $pwd, $id); // Apply your statement $query = mysqli_prepare($query); // Execute your statement mysqli_stmt_execute($query);`

I am reading around the internet and learning about 32-bit and 64-bit windowing API. On The Future of Windowing, there is a statement: The 32-bit API's do not offer pixel data access — only clipping and drawing. The window bounding rectangle is a useful intermediate value. The 64-bit API's do offer pixel data access. However, access to display buffer objects is at the discretion of the application on 32- and 64-bit Windows platforms.
