In Solarmed, two opposing armies clash together, for their own fate. Whoever defeats the other, will become the true ruler of Solarmed. All Solarmed is at stake. Each player takes on the role of a leader, assembling a different squad, and sending them on their way to various objectives. Each mission is unique, with its own objective, terrain, and clash of armies. The result is massive turn-based, army on army conflicts. Whoever captures a key building, will be able to easily defend it, blocking enemy progress. Whoever captures a key city, can claim the throne of Solarmed.

However, behind every city lies the dark fathom of something unique. Of course, you won't stand idly by as your army is defeated. You need to scavenge for spare parts, heal your squads, and upgrade them, if necessary. Even a single mistake can cost you your squad, and you.

Key Features ● Army vs army: Survive alone, or work together in alliance and struggle to expand your territory. Fight for the city, the castle, or the mines, and then, face the siege in order to gain the upper hand. ● Single player:

I'm trying to find if it's possible to have a generic handler, that could be made off something like:

class GenericHandler { public: GenericHandler(); bool HandleEvent(wxEvent& event); }; And then in the GUI's main function: bool MyApp::OnInit( ) { genericHandler.HandleEvent( event ); } A: A wxWindow is a window class. There is no need to have any particular window class for it to work (for example, you can make a wxPanel, and you won't need to have a wxFrame for that to work). So, there are multiple possible ways. One way would be using event handlers. See: How to use wxWidgets event handlers?. Another way would be using a wxEventLoop, wxWindows main loop. See: How to use wxWidgets event handlers?. You can use a window class, but there isn't need for it, so for example you could make a generic handler that is an anonymous, non-derived, non-inherited class instead
