What's new in Hide And Seek - Viking Hat:

Game (A.K.A Arrows, Arrows, Hector) A Viking arrow is armed with a hooked spearhead, with each curve or ridge in the tip used to tell the direction of the arrow's flight. This game, Where's the Arrow, is played much like Hide and Seek. Archers hide and people try to guess the direction they are fired from. The host (the person who chose to sit at the center of their circle) starts the game and fires an arrow into the circle. All the kids in the circle try to guess which way it was shot. Whoever guesses it most, wins. Instructions: It is called Where's the Arrow because the arrow points towards the person who shot it. Sometimes the target can hear the arrow flying so everyone points in the same direction at once. The game ends when all the arrows are gone. This game was on one of our school shows. It was mostly about trying to catch a summer job, as well as fishing at the lake and going to the movie. It was a fun show with lots of laughs! Front of card: "You and the Peacock" "2 players. Game played by two teams. The lady to the right begins the game and moves around the circle as the first player. The first person called the game by holding up a card with a phrase on it. The lady to the left then calls the game and every player calls out a figure and must guess their number. If the 'peacock' pointed at is your number, you must move. Once moving, you must stay there until someone calls out the same number as yours and continues the game. Then the lady to the left will call out the next number until they are all called and gone. Once the game is over, the lady to the right will call out the first phrase." Back of card: "3 Peacocks" "3 peacocks. A classic game of hide and seek. Peacocks hide and the players call out numbers to try to find them. Any child who finds four peacocks will be the winner." Instructions: Black Queen - The game begins with the kids chucking colored marbles over their heads. The one who catches the most wins. Bottle Drive - One player is blindfolded and must guess the location of a bottle by pushing it. The first one to guess correctly ends the game. Chest
