What's new:

One of the best parts about being a writer and not an editor is that there’s always a new creative opportunity to exercise to reach out and capture the stories of your customers. The attorneys at TSI last year proved it by telling us about the event they attended in an editorial, and I believe that they nailed it. Attending this event is a good time to share with entrepreneurs and business leaders that there is power in relationships and networking. But without doing it at a high profile event, you’re going to start your bootstrap journey without exposure. This distinction between networking for business and networking to gain friends is something that I absolutely miss. I don’t miss the initial high that comes from starting a business. I miss the way that it led to meeting people to help with their business and learning about their problems and processes. One of the things I’ve been doing the last couple of months is to think about my network. I’m figuring out for myself, without consulting any mentors, the process of nurturing relationships. Last year, I wrote about my process after the time jump of last year and how it’s affected me, my relationships and how they moved people to be more involved in their communities. So we’ll talk about the power of online communities to organically foster relationships across technology, events, and markets. The Type of Community That’s Liberated Me At MITX last year, I heard a great talk about a guy who founded a business marketing video creation company. His advice to anyone who was trying to start a business was that “You should always ask yourself, is there a business within my network?” What he meant by that was this: You start out with an idea that represents a business or business process or an application. But it takes a lot of up front work to get to that point. You have to build networks within your groups, talk to your customers and prospects and get their feedback. Make sure the type of information you have tells the story that you need to tell. But it can take a lot of time and resources to get all that information so it should be matched up to your idea. The problem is that not everyone who needs what you offer will talk to you. So the only way to start doing business is to ask around. But your network has to support that. Then you need to get

Tales of Monkey Island is the first in a series of episodic adventures starring the lovable Monkey Island characters Guybrush Threepwood and Elaine Marley. The game sees Guybrush given the chance to take a vacation from his hectic pirate life, and relish the peace and tranquility of his beloved wife Elaine's inimitable home. Unfortunately, his boring life is rudely interrupted by the arrival of his arch-nemesis LeChuck and his minions. Outraged and humiliated, Guybrush vows revenge and sets sail for the Cackling Isles. Encounter the beautiful and exotic mer-people and his new pals the sea lion Coronado and Morgan LeFlay, who just might hold the key to the salvation of Monkey Island. While Guybrush is hunting for the perfect sea sponge, he gets involved in a struggle with strange magicians, cannibalistic pirates and a resurrected sea monster all the way to the bottom of the ocean. Can Guybrush make it out of this mess with his beloved wife Elaine, or is she lost forever in the wreckage of this ancient volcano? Featuring classic platforming action and a variety of fiendish puzzles, Tales of Monkey Island may just be the greatest adventure you've ever played!
