If playback doesn't work, I have a question about (k+l=n) Possible Duplicate: Why is the sum of all integers that are multiples of 11 equal to 225? I have a question about the following equation: $(k+l=n)$ I've tried to approach it in a lot of ways, but all seem to lead to the same answer, which is 11n\$. Would someone mind explaining this equation to me? A: The easiest way to prove this is to rewrite the equation so that you're starting with \$n\$ and counting: $(n-k) \cdot 11 + k \cdot 1 = n$. The left side counts how many multiples there are for \$n\$ of \$11\$, so it should be 11n\$. A: HINT: $k+l=n$ implies $k=n-l$. Bob ZS Now, as explained by @ivan, $k \cdot 11 \equiv k \pmod{11}$ iff $k \equiv k \pmod{11}$. Now, $11n \equiv 11 \cdot n \pmod{11}$ iff $1 \cdot n \equiv n \pmod{11}$ and hence $k \equiv n-l \pmod{11}$ iff $1 \cdot n \equiv 11n \pmod{11}$ iff $1 \cdot n \equiv n \pmod{11}$. Finally, using that $\mathbb{Z} \mapsto \mathbb{Z} / 11\mathbb{Z}$ is a ring homomorphism, we have $k \equiv n-l \pmod{11}$ iff $k+l \equiv n \pmod{11}$ and by the fact that

Universities are becoming an untrustworthy source of information. Whether we're talking about the lies being spread by the Coalition's #FakeAcademicExperiments website, the poor quality of some high-profile research, or even the ongoing battle to combat the notion of Australia's drinking culture, the perception that universities are ultimately a biased source of information is a powerful one. Social media has exacerbated the sense of misinformation and a reliance on the gatekeepers of education. An article that is reprinted nearly verbatim from another news website without mentioning any corrections or clear sourcing is perhaps the clearest illustration of the problems created by this perception. In June, after an investigation into research involving South Australian students, an online news outlet published a piece that compared the results of the Higher School Certificate and University Entrance examinations conducted in the Australian Capital Territory and South Australia. The most obvious problem with this story is that the article was completely unreferenced. As Catherine Livingstone-Moore recently noted, the article could only have been written by a computer. This is no academic blunder, it is simply the result of a misinformation campaign that suggests CSIRO scientists are manipulating results. In fact, the data collection form used by the
