In the distant future, high-tech civilization is swept away by a terrible calamity. In 2038, the year after the event known as The Flame, the world has been reborn in the name of humanity's survival. But where have the people gone? The past is no longer gone. It's lost. Mankind's identity is no longer about how it moves forward into the future, but about how much it reminisces about the past and how it perceives its own self. And as the grass begins to grow over the sites of the many catastrophic events that have formed the world, that identity begins to shape itself. The story takes place in a world, YORO, where giant dragons rule the skies of the wasteland and life is only barely possible. As one of the first of a small group of pilots, you will guide the lost travelers across the dangerous and unknown lands of YORO in search of a legendary path. Overview: Welcome to the year 2038. In a merciless world, the dragon fleet rules the skies. Humanity's life is divided among the few who survive. It is your job to help the others find peace and calm. And among the battles, you'll need to remember the people you find. You'll get to know them all very well. From the first glimpse at the graceful, blue-haired girl to the desperate romance with a young helicopter pilot, the great journey ahead will bring an adventure of your life. Impression: I think all my friends who played the RPG of the same genre with me, (Dragon Quest VIII for Windows, Omega Ruby for Gameboy Color) were expecting me to say the game is a sequel of Dragon Quest VIII. But, I hate this game. The story was so bad that it really drove me crazy. The story was so obvious that it was driving me crazy. The game itself felt very sluggish to move around. Sometimes, when I wanted to talk to a certain character, I could't. Nothing new in the UI. Took me much longer to get used to the game. FAQ: Q: This game is a sequel of Dragon Quest VIII (not Omega Ruby/Alter Code). Ans: Yes, but its quality is not high. Q: This game is very similar to WoW. Ans: No, but it was made by Japanese. Q: Can we bring our changes to the game? Ans: You can only change the menu theme

It is about publishing commercial information or events with famous or recognizable logos. You are not obligated to make new pictures for it, it's just for fun. (If you want I'll edit logo on some of them, for example the avextreme logo) All you have to do is post a link to the video and include the name of the company (description what it's about) a minimum of 4 tags(company name, name of the product, how it was released, date/time) in the description or in the tags. And put the company logo you want to use Tags are: (company name, name of the product) Date/time: (date/time of release) You can add/remove tags or change the format. So just put "Product XY" "How it was released" as tags, but you don't have to add "Date/time" or "Company" So: "Product XY" "How it was released" edit: sorry for the tags, i need to take a minute to figure how to add tags to posts Dignitas Forum was created to serve as a single place for users to gather and post their questions and to also promote discussion of Dignitas products, including game/software reviews. Luang Por Chum Aphrabangkorn, 33, and Thonglor Chaiboon theropant, 22, were seized with no apparent explanation. The jury assessed both men to be mentally insane. They were sentenced to life in prison in December. Mr Thonglor Chaiboon is appealing his sentence. The first case of a string of murders linked to the monk movement, the Khmer Rouge cult leader known as “Gen Sar Kheng”, lies submerged in the sleepy Mae Chi River near the city of Battambang. “It is as if the bodies of thousands of men or women are finally resting in peace,” former monk Suebsam Kun said, tears welling in his eyes. Efforts to bury the bodies continue this month, although the bodies of some of the victims have already been planted in a field near the cemetery in Battambang where the cult leader’s body was laid to rest. The victims have been buried in the unmarked graveyard on a former military base just across the river. Some families still refuse to give their loved ones’ remains back to the families, even though a small burial ceremony was held for them on Thursday. “The families are still hoping for a miracle,” said Sok Porung, an unofficial leader of the vigilante group called “Buddhists for the Protection of Monks and Elders”, who runs a noodle stall in Battambang market. “They’re still praying that Gen Sar Kheng will live again,” he said. During the Khmer Rouge’s two-year reign from 1975 to 1979, more than 20,000 people were executed or worked to death with rags under the regime’s infamous Tuol Sleng prison. Gen Sar Kheng and his wife were killed by firing squad in 1997, shortly after he had been sent to vengeful death for the disappearances of thousands of Buddhists, including prisoners of war - his former colleagues. Now, 2.5 years after the military raked across the caves in Nuon Soy and Veng Koulnor and ultimately uncovered the temples’ gold relics, the ongoing effort to come to terms with the past began. “We still don’t know a lot, but we know one thing,” said Phone Endothe, former dean of
