What's New In Photoshop CS4?

July is a really busy month for us here at VideoJug. We've been hard at work getting our latest release, ready for public consumption. We've added a whole bunch of new features and implemented a number of bug fixes. We're really excited to share some of these with you. What's New? We've added a new button to the Home screen of our Android app: OTA Update. That allows you to check whether a device is already updated. When a device is already up to date you can simply download a new build. We also fixed an issue that prevented the button from appearing on some devices. We've improved the way we upload OTA builds to devices. Previously we only allowed you to upload the latest build, but now we allow you to select a specific build, which can help speed up the OTA process. If you're currently using our beta testing program, you may have noticed that we've been uploading more frequent OTA builds. Improvements to our beta testing program have also been made. You can now select specific APKs to beta test, which makes it much faster to collect your feedback. We're also making it easier to set up your device for beta testing, and we've added the ability to send feedback directly via e-mail. Faster and more convenient uploads should help make the OTA process a lot easier. Just a few weeks ago it was very time consuming to collect feedback, and there were a few days where we were getting no feedback at all. As a result we've added a screen to our Android app that should help solve this issue. If you're still not getting any feedback, please let us know. New: Settings screen The first version of the settings screen in our Android app came out a month ago. We realized a new settings screen would make sense for Android as well. The settings screen in VideoJug helps you improve the quality of the videos you upload, and it also lets you change your video settings, including whether it's visible for search engines. New: H.264 License key screen A few people have asked us what our license key is, and we're happy to introduce VideoJug.tv! This allows you to upload videos to your channel without being bothered by video ads. It's free for
