afterword in my windows registry and changed the password. but it gives me an error that says "this folder cannot be displayed because you do not have permission to view the contents of this folder". A: Try copying the contents of regedit.exe, along with its subfolder files, to another location in the directory. Make sure you go to the root of the drive (not the c: drive), not your desktop. Run regedit from there. If that works, rename regedit.exe. Once it's renamed to something else, rename regedit back to regedit.exe Alternately, if the default location for the regedit application is more useful for you than the desktop, you could simply add regedit to your Startup folder and manually launch it from there. (Right-click the Start button > Select All Programs > Accessories > System Tools > Startup Manager) Also, you could just add a folder to your Start-up folder (Right-click the Start button > Select All Programs > Accessories > System Tools > Startup Manager) to add regedit to the startup folder and also avoid this problem in the future. The U.S. Coast Guard is warning swimmers and boaters to exercise caution because of dangerous rip currents in Long Island Sound. Rip currents can develop in shallow waters with swift currents, with strong wave action or with low visibility and are most prevalent during the summer months. A rip current can carry swimmers, kayakers and boaters into areas with rocks and other treacherous shoals, which can be extremely dangerous, especially with strong currents and changing conditions. Carrying and storing personal items in a tied off boat or kayak in the water also makes it more likely to be caught in a rip current. The Coast Guard in Massachusetts says strong rip currents have been reported on the Connecticut, Long Island and Massachusetts coasts. To reduce the risk of getting caught in a rip current while boating, the Coast Guard suggests: Use a trolling motor instead of your boat's motor. Carry a cellphone, oar or life vest for signaling help. Know your local conditions and practice effective body positioning and paddling methods. Know the current conditions and tides, and the safest speed at which you can swim, kayak or paddle. Leave your wallet in your boat. Avoid overcrowding the water and waiting for others to provide safety precautions
