May 31, 1992). We have viewed the evidence in the light most favorable to Schwab and find that it is sufficient to permit a jury to conclude that Millers' actions were unreasonable. Schwab agreed to sell the franchise to Millers and that sale was evidenced by three separate documents. Millers accepted that sale as evidenced by its executed escrow agreement. When the sale was still not consummated, Millers began collection activities. This might ordinarily be a reasonable thing for a creditor to do. However, in this case Millers, in its zeal to obtain the franchise, also sent negative mailings and advertisements to a co-worker of Schwab's son. Even though the net income of the franchise was an important factor in the sale
