Hydrogels are flexible and permeable semisolid networks of crosslinked polymer chains which have been used widely to control the release of drugs for a prolonged period. Poly(2-hydroxyethyl methacrylate-co-N-vinyl acetamide) and poly(2-hydroxyethyl methacrylate-co-N-vinyl pyrrolidone) [poly(HEMA-co-VA/VP)] were synthesized via a controlled free-radical polymerization. The effect of comonomer composition on the properties of the hydrogels was investigated. The swelling behavior, water uptake, and diffusion of water, fluorescein isothiocyanate, and a cationic fluorescent dye (rhodamine) have been studied using immersion tests. It was found that the swelling behavior of the poly(HEMA-co-VA/VP) was changed remarkably by the presence of VP. The maximum swelling percentage of the hydrogel, which was determined as a function of the composition of the polymer, showed a monotonic increase with increasing VP content. The swelling capacity of the copolymers was determined. In contrast, the swelling capacity of the copolymers showed a dramatic drop with a further increase in VP content. Water diffusion studies revealed that the diffusion coefficient increased from 22.5 x 10(-12) to 133.7 x 10(-12) cm2/s with the incorporation of more VA into the copoly
