Trend Micro Maximum Security 2019. The genetics of oculopharyngeal muscular dystrophy (OPMD): mutations at the myotonic muscular dystrophy protein kinase (DMPK) locus. The oculopharyngeal muscular dystrophy (OPMD) syndrome is a dominantly inherited disease with no effective treatment and a poor prognosis. OPMD is caused by mutations in myotonic muscular dystrophy protein kinase (DMPK) on chromosome 19q13.3. To date, three dominant founder mutations have been reported at the DMPK locus: a missense mutation resulting in the replacement of isoleucine for valine at codon 608 in all patients with the disease (the V608I mutation), a 5' splice mutation resulting in retention of intron 52 (IVS52+1G>A), and a missense mutation at codon 140 of DMPK, the P140L mutation. We have developed a reverse transcriptase polymerase chain reaction assay to detect mutations at the DMPK locus and employed this assay to screen for these founder mutations in 39 individuals from 24 families with OPMD. We found that 2 of 24 (8%) OPMD families carried the V608I mutation, 4 of 24 (17%) carried the IVS52+1G>A mutation, and 5 of 24 (21%) carried the P140L mutation. This is the first report of any DMPK mutation in the predominantly Caucasian U.K. population. The V608I mutation is the most common mutation in OPMD patients (21 of 39 or 53%), and it may also be associated with a greater degree of disease severity. 595f342e71
