About The Game: Try to get the best time in Time-trial and beat your friends and scores in Challenge mode. The game is controlled by a gamepad or a keyboard and the goal is to collect as many points as possible! Pet Squad Racing is a light-hearted speed-racing game for up to 2 players with cartoon graphics and full of great music and sound effects! With over 100 different challenges you can test your luck and see if you have got what it takes to beat the game! There is a physics engine in place that governs movement of all the vehicles and pets. Your pet obeys traffic signs and collides against the walls if they can, but in the end you should try to avoid such things and win the race. Speed is your key in Pet Squad Racing and you can speed up, slow down and use other tricks to overtake or get an advantage over your opponents. There are more than 100 different levels in Pet Squad Racing to race through. The more challenges you complete, the more difficult they will get. The game is designed for ages 3+. Some of the things you can do in Pet Squad Racing: Race through 100 crazy levels. All of them are designed to keep you on the edge of your seat and will test your skills. Try the "Scratch The Clock" challenge and see if you can beat the clock. Speed through the levels and try to beat your previous best time in Time-trial. Challenge your friends in local multiplayer. Challenge your friends in different elimination games and competitions. Customize your pet with different colors, clothes, accessories and more! Include your own pet into the game! Call your friends and race them with your pet. You can send different cards to your friends to compete with them. Eliminate your opponents in a race to the finish. Try to get your opponents in time to send you home. Eliminate your opponents in time for a special reward. Find your friends and challenge them! Share your high scores with your friends and competitors via Facebook and Twitter. Include your friends and opponents in a race! Like Pet Squad Racing? Subscribe to

Features Key:

Lots of Colors
19 Tracks
Vitalized Polygon Gloss, Durable and Packed with Elements!
Suitable for large classes of 2 to 100 students

Process

This is an off-center-shared process game which is time based. The music is not a playlist, it has the same chord progression for all the track and the same background sound pattern for the whole game. Inside the game, the student conduct a small patchwork of 5 cards (traces, flowerpiece, timeline with - chords/ key change and notes) to predict and clarify visual information. Great tool for short term color memory and self-criticism.

Game elements:

Six lesson cards:
- Color cards
- Fabric pages - Brackets
- Blox boxes
- FlowerPies
- Kaleidoscopes
- Color boards
- Color Puzzles
Color board for each exercises:
- 5 scotch tape trackers (for tracing the art, for making charts, for memory etc.)
- 20 blocks of colored fabric (to make boards)
- 20 straight lines of cardboard (for blox boxes)
- 4 flowerpies - 32 Color Puzzle illustrations (to make color cards)

Classroom conditions:

Any surface can be used for the experiment, like a table, the floor or a crapeboard or any piece of paper or cardboard, the objects just has to be able to be handled (rotate) and erased.

- We recommend using boxes and answering on the "green" side. Boxes must be closed or else the colors are hard to see.
- Most of the students can work at the same time, in two teacher-as-model groups with 10 to 20 students.
- There are no rules regarding the order of the steps, the cards, the blocks and the cardboard can be used in any order.

What's new in Gamer Simulator:

Khan's Mongol Empire, 1199-1259 Since publishing India of 1900, I have been asked a number of questions about the Mongols, perhaps the most frequently asked being “if the Mongols did not conquer China, why did they form such an empire?” I would thank you to refer to my blog for an answer or better yet, do your own research. But I hope this review will help you to understand why the rise of the Mongol Empire was truly one of the greatest stories in world history. Orientations Before I begin to discuss the reasons for the Mongol empire’s success, I would like to quickly sketch its geographical parameters. In the year 23 after Christ, tribes of the Oirat (or ‘of’) and two other groups – the Khalkha or Yuz, a medet (a member of the Khalkha) and the Wanchoi (the ‘correct’ spelling of a non-Chinese tribe) - united to form the Mongol empire that encompassed the eastern third of China, together with much of the rest of the Mongolian plateau and Mongolia itself, incorporating Persia and the Middle East with South and Central Asia. For most of the history of the Mongol Empire, Mongol rule covered most of China (the Mongolian Empire existed, in part, on the map I have here) but in 1368, the Ming dynasty, the last traditional Chinese dynasty, ended control of China’s significant southern provinces to the Vietnamese. The regions of the Mongols that lie to the south, Myanmar, Thailand and Indochina, and those to the north, Eastern Europe, Central Asia and Mongolia (together with Russia) are often referred to as the Circum-Mongolian Region. I have read that the Desert Peoples of the Hittite, Kurgan and Altaic cultures were the actual ‘mother’ of the Mongols with the first migrating from the south to the north, and being replaced by Mongol-Turkic peoples moving in the same direction, as to establish an empire encompassing East, Southeast Asia, Mongolia and north-Central Asia. Perhaps that cannot be proven, but clearly the Mongols represented a point of convergence of geographical possibilities. At one time, the Mongols controlled more territories than any other world culture in history but today, they have been eclipsed by the United States and the USSR. The significance of the Mongols, however, can never be overstated.
