"What if Pacman had a duel with a collection of baby ducks instead of mazes?" Planet Land Police Academy is a game designed to be played by young, young people (ages 6-12) and is intended to be its main target audience. A little known secret is, in fact, that the games series has been around since 2012! Edit: This is a prequel to the Level 2 of Planet Land Police Academy, it features the Pilot School, and is released by Funtest on the Funtest Store. A: I've only ever played Patrol Academy for NES, so I don't know if this is the game. However, a lot of the puzzle games from this era were one-offs. The same board could have many different designs depending on which game publisher did the artwork. I've also only ever played the NES version. The one that stands out is Mr. Newton by GX (I was always curious about his developer), which I played recently but cannot remember how it ended. Q: Python: a User Defined Exception I have a class with 3 functions: class Book: def __init__(self, title, author, category): self.title = title self.author = author self.category = category def set_title(self, title): self.title = title return self def set_author(self, author): self.author = author return self def set_category(self, category): self.category = category return self I would like to ensure that book authors do not assign a different title to a book with the same title. But also I would like for book authors to not be able to assign the same category as another book (so book authors cannot "own" a single category). How should I go about making sure that these rules are met without creating a validation routine/function for each user? A: You can create a method to validate the title of a book and a method to validate the category of a book. This method returns c9d1549cdd

You can drag and drop the appropriate sound file (in.wav format) from Windows explorer to the game. The z_sound utility (see below) makes easy work of this. HOW TO USE THE Z_SOUND SOFTWARE:Follow the simple instructions and select the sound file by double clicking the file name. The software takes only the folder where the sound file resides, so it will find the file quickly. You will need to put "found sound files" in the "Scripts/z_sound" folder you will put in your "Cheat Engine\z_cheat\VirtualBox\Scripts" folder. In order for the sound to be heard you must also put the sound file in the "Cheat Engine\z_cheat\VirtualBox\Audio" folder. Hacks for the game do not require this software.
