Nipple-sparing mastectomy has been increasingly popular in the last few decades for the treatment of early-stage breast cancer. In the UK, nipple-sparing mastectomy was introduced in 1993, and in the United States a few years later. Despite the widespread use of this technique and the subsequent debate regarding its clinical efficacy, there is still controversy regarding the possibility of malignant recurrence in the nipple-areola complex (NAC), the aesthetic results, and the long-term functional outcomes. To date, there has been little work published on the long-term outcomes of nipple-preserving mastectomy. The purpose of this review article is to present the underlying biology of the nipple, discuss potential new nipple-sparing techniques, and evaluate the long-term functional and aesthetic results of nipple-sparing mastectomy in the management of breast cancer.Q: How to extract a list of number from a string? I'm new to python and I need to parse a string and return a list of numbers if the string contains a list of numbers. For example, '11-20-2017', will return a list ['11','20','2017'] because it contains a list of numbers in it. I have tried this, but it's returning an error: def contains_list(str): if str.isalpha(): return True else: return False def parse_list(string, open_list): if(contains_list(string)): result = [] for word in string.split(): if(word.isdigit()):

One of them, heat-stable 5 kDa-factor, activates protein synthesis in target cells similarly to conditioned medium from cultured mouse cells. This factor represents a homodimer of an acidic molecule with isoelectric point 5.5. This factor is synthesized and secreted by tumoral cells, and the concentration in the culture medium reaches up to 100 ng/ml. Conditioned medium from MOPC-315 cells contains also a homodimer of an acidic molecule with isoelectric point 6.3. It stimulates protein synthesis in cell cultures of a chicken B cell line BI-1. Thus the MOPC-315 factor (containing both 5 and 6 kDa factor) seems to be similar to the factor activated by chicken B cells (containing 6 kDa factor). This factor could be a growth factor for human B cells.In order to facilitate more efficient and faster access to healthcare, the number of referrals from one specialist to another has been increasing, for example, due to the growing use of telenursing to refer patients to specialists. Telemedicine is one such method for referring a patient to a specialist. In telemedicine, a healthcare professional such as a physician or a nurse is physically located apart from a patient, but is able to remotely diagnose and/or treat the patient using medical hardware and software that provides video, audio, and other data to enable the healthcare professional to diagnose and treat the patient. While telemedicine is a useful tool for increasing patient access to healthcare, many factors can affect the reliability and quality of the diagnoses and/or treatments provided using telemedicine. For example, in order to make a diagnosis, a healthcare professional may need to review patient data, make a subjective assessment of patient data, and communicate the patient data and assessment to another healthcare professional, all using limited bandwidth and/or other bandwidth-constrained communication channels, which can result in communication errors, misinterpretations, or missed diagnoses.The difference in double-bundle and multidirectional hamstring tendon
