This new technology enables in-game properties to intelligently respond to the movement of individual players, and introduces new types of movement that are impossible in previous FIFA games. For example, players will now react to off-ball movement, and can use the ball to build momentum into a new move, perform new off-ball tricks or pass the ball to new players – all by controlling the ball as if it were a joystick or pad. This gives you access to a new set of playmaking options like no other football game. You will also notice new skills and styles of play you might not have tried before. Let's look at the many ways that these new features will impact your game.

React to new off-ball movement In FIFA 22, players will be more aware of off-ball movement than ever before. For example, if a player is chasing the ball, the ball will be moved in the direction the player is going to prevent the player from colliding. If the player is on the wrong side of the pitch, the ball will flow over their foot (in an instinctive way). You can see the new off-ball movement in action in the new "Ball Physics" section of the PES E3 2015 trailer.

On-ball movement is also different in FIFA 22. If a player has the ball in a static position, such as being tackled, the player will react to off-ball movement the same way as they will when they get the ball in the air. This means that players will react to off-ball movement in the same way they will when trying to break free.

Detect new on-ball passes The ability to make on-ball passes that are not scripted or expected will allow you to use the ball to create momentum, add surprise to your playmaking, or open up the game even further. The new "Ball Physics" section of the PES E3 2015 trailer will help explain this new ability. Let players build momentum

In FIFA 22, players can use their bodies and the ball to build momentum in new ways. For example, when a player receives the ball, they can use their momentum to change direction in mid-air and try a new pass or dribble.

Tackle attacks When you're chasing the player with the ball, try tackles at different angles. You might be able to pull the ball out of the air

A man who confessed to sexually assaulting a 16-year-old girl after she left school and was then caught by CCTV cameras committing another of his sexual assaults has been given a suspended jail sentence. Jasvir Singh was a student at John Lyon School when in June 2012 he tricked the teenager, who cannot be named, into leaving the school grounds by giving her a package. Prosecutor Ian Critchlow told Cork Circuit Criminal Court that the victim, who was not an A-level student, left the school in Belmont and was spotted minutes later in the same area by CCTV cameras. Singh followed her and grabbed her by the throat before sexually assaulting her. The 17-year-old then took her back to his house in the Belmont area where he performed a sex act on her. Speaking after the sentencing, the girl said the incident has had a profound impact on her life. “Even though I had hopes for a brighter future, it has caused my life to be very difficult and it is still going on,” she said. Judge Seán Ryan imposed a four-month jail sentence but suspended the last three months on the grounds that Singh had been a “shepherd of the flock”
