Based on the results of a number of studies showing an increased tendency toward an elevated blood lipid level in patients with systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) an attempt was made to examine serum lipids, lipoproteins and plasma triglycerides in 25 patients with SLE, aged 19-45 years, which were compared with 25 age-matched healthy subjects. The serum cholesterol, phospholipids, HDL-cholesterol, LDL-cholesterol, triglycerides and apolipoproteins were determined in the patients and in the control subjects; the value for apolipoprotein A-I was also examined. No significant difference was found between the patient and the control group with regard to the lipid and apolipoprotein concentration. No correlation was found between the different lipid or apolipoprotein values and the activity of the disease, indicated by the SLEDAI. The results are in accord with the notion that there is no alteration in the lipid metabolism in patients with SLE, although they do not exclude the possibility of a minor disturbance in the metabolism of individual lipids.44 Life Lessons You Learned From Your Parents Though you might have gotten many things as a child from your parents, you can never really realize it until you get a glimpse of the life lessons they taught you and which is nothing but priceless.
