This game was built on Grasshopper 3.0. You can export the project as an.glg file or a.mgl file. It is compatible with Android, Mac and Windows! See you in the cemetery! System Requirements: Android: 2.3.5 and up Windows: 7 and up (Windows XP, Vista or 7) Mac: OS X 10.9 and up Player: Type: Early Access Keyboard: Yes Controls: Keyboard Screenshots Video Screenshots Bug Reports/Issues Email: [email protected] Other Hello, I would like to change some references to a better one, are you going to make this changes? Thanks Why is this game not available in English? Its was ready to be picked up, but I decided to put it to early access because I wanted to be sure that this game will be fully translated and released.

I checked the language and everything seems to be fine, you can change the language of the game as many times as you want, the file is not a problem, so please don't take it like that. The game is, now you have to translate the texts, and after that when the game will be in early access I will release a seperate update which will contain a fully translated text file. You are blocked from downloading this game. Why? What's going on? I gave you the App Store URL. You are sure about the App Store URL? Its blocked by Apple? Or you cant download the App from the App Store? To be honest, I did it myself because I would like to keep this game as it is (without translations or game updates) for a while as I still want to polish it and make it as a one of the best typing games. To be totally honest, I dont know how I did it and I dont want to start such a discussion, also, it would be interesting to know how you decided it (e.g. which sites were blocked). Also, I would like to know what you did to get to this App Store URL, as this is forbidden. I found your explanation reasonable. Once that's all working fine, please give me a shout on Discord and I'll send you a free Promo/In-Game code. I'm not sure why it says you are blocked, it seems to be a

The Ironclad is one of the best examples of wartime overspecialization and army modernization as applied in the early 1900s. The U.S. Army sought to equalize the performance of the British Dreadnought battleships, and the U.S. Navy was fighting a war a generation early to compensate for its lack of battleships; as a result, both combatant branches saw increased technological focus, improving overall performance. The most eye-catching, and perhaps advanced, aspect of the battleship was its armor. Unlike most armor used by other branches of the armed forces, Dreadnought battleships carried a mix of armor, including thick belt armor, thick shields, and a very heavily-armored turret. While thick, armored belt was common on warships of all kinds, Dreadnought-class battleships represented the only well-documented application of "thick belt armor," a combination of belt armor and heavily-armored turret in a single shield.<sup>1</sup> Significantly, the Ironclad employed an armor layout that possessed very little practical survivability due to its vulnerability to surface-fire,

I've been configuring a rails app to use a topic exchange so it can receive messages from different microservices. Since there are no exchanges, the messaging between my microservices is managed by RabbitMQ, which has a possibility of name clashes. So, for example, if my microservice A publishes a message with the content "foo", microservice B might also receive
