HERE's logo has become the first smartphone maker to ship over 100 million devices. CNET reports that with 110.3 million phones shipped globally, HERE's logo, "a shared global map service provider with backing from BMW, Deutsche Telekom, and SAP," is now the world's most used smartphone brand. However, the news comes with a caveat: Nokia and Ericsson's competing Nokia brand and Ericsson brand is now the second most-used phone brand in the world. The European operators Nokia and Ericsson have reportedly formed a joint venture to create the Nokia brand. Ericsson will hold a 53.4 percent stake. Nokia famously pulled its brand out of smartphones in 2011. I want to read contents of one file from current working directory and use it. I have searched and found that we can get current working directory by looking for this path. File src = new File("."); But I am looking for some other way to get this file. Also java has no file name parameter, we just call file.getName() to get name. So I am assuming that java can't access files in current working directory if it does not have a name. But as per my search it seems that java looks for file in current working directory when we ask for the file name Is my assumption is valid? If not, how can java search files if it does not have any name? Edit Let me make it more clear. I want to do something like this `InputStream is = new File(currentDir).getStream();` But is = `new File(currentDir).getStream();` does not work. So How can java look for files if it does not have name? A: Java SE doesn't have any file name argument. File.getName() is the closest Java has to this functionality. If you want to use this for files, you have to provide the name via some other method - something more robust - than just a call to `File#getName`.

Sodium, calcium, phosphorus and potassium were supplied to 7 groups of growing rats to investigate the effect on their metabolism of varying these cations in the diet at 5.5, 9.4, 13.7, 17.0 and 20.9 g/100 g of diet for the high and low protein diets, and at 13.7, 17.0 and 20.9 g/100 g for the high and low sodium diets. Animals were killed at 8 weeks of age and uric acid, creatinine, magnesium, sodium, potassium, calcium, phosphorus, liver and kidney weights were determined. With the increase in dietary sodium, there was a decline in daily food intake. Uric acid excretion rate decreased with the increase in sodium in the diet. In the low protein diets, the creatinine excretion rate in the low sodium group was higher than in the high sodium group. There was a positive correlation between potassium and uric acid excretion rate and a negative correlation with sodium excretion rate in both high and low protein diets. In all groups, creatinine excretion rate correlated positively with sodium excretion rate. Magnesium, sodium and potassium concentrations were highest in the low protein diets, while lowest with the high sodium diets. Calcium levels were highest in the high protein diets, while phosphorus levels were highest in the low protein diets. The results suggest that there may be an optimal level of sodium in the diet for growing rats. want to keep the name, "Floeh". Q: "Squeaker" is the rarer name in the set, but the "Squeakers" name is a real NFL football team. Why not choose your regular name if you were going to be a dog?
