The purpose of this study was to evaluate the safety, efficacy, and accuracy of computed tomography (CT)-directed radiofrequency ablation of hepatic tumors guided by transabdominal ultrasound. Thirty patients with 39 hepatic tumors were treated with CT-guided radiofrequency ablation. Follow-up CT and ultrasound studies were performed at 1 month and 3 months after treatment. Thirty lesions in 30 patients were treated with radiofrequency ablation using 12.5- or 15-gauge needles. The mean size of the treated tumors was 2.6 cm (range, 1.5 to 6 cm). The mean pain score at 1 month was 2.6 (range, 1 to 5). Abdominal pain intensity was unchanged in 17 patients and decreased in four patients. Seven lesions in seven patients were partially or completely ablated, with an efficacy rate of 82.8%. Complications occurred in seven patients, including one patient with hepatic failure with renal insufficiency, three patients with liver abscess, one patient with fever and abdominal pain, and two patients with bile leakage. CT-guided radiofrequency ablation of hepatic tumors is a safe and effective therapeutic option in carefully selected patients.Abnormal expression of viral glycoproteins on the surface of hepatocytes in the early stage of porcine circovirus type 2 (PCV2) infection in the liver. Porcine circovirus 2 (PCV2) is the primary causal agent of porcine circovirus-associated diseases (PCVAD), including postweaning multisystemic wasting syndrome (PMWS) and porcine dermatitis and nephropathy syndrome (PDNS). As there is increasing evidence that nonstructural proteins (NS) 2, NS3, and NS5 of PCV2 are related to PCVAD, we detected the expression and distribution of virus-associated cellular proteins in the liver of PCV2-infected pigs.
