This invention relates to a catalyst for producing olefins by the thermal decomposition of a C.sub.3-6 paraffin hydrocarbon with a vapour phase of oxygen. Olefins are well known as important chemical intermediates for the production of plastics, synthetic rubbers, various olefinic detergents, and the like. The catalytic dehydration of propane to propene by means of activated carbon and metals has been known and described in the literature, as, for example, in Handbuch der organischen Chemie, vol. 11, page 855 (1960) and Reaction Kinetics with Metal-Carbon Systems, edited by K. A. Smith and J. K. Brudvig, North-Holland Publishing Co., Amsterdam, 1965, pages 317 to 332. DE-PS No. 31 41 848 describes a process for producing olefins from propane by oxidation with oxygen-containing gas mixture at temperatures of 750.degree. to 950.degree. C. A catalyst of iron on hydrogen activated carbon is used. Iron is stated to be incorporated into the activated carbon with formation of an iron oxide. The fine catalyst may also react to the extent of 40% with iron by vol. On the other hand, Fe.sub.3 O.sub.4 shows lower catalytic activity at the specified reaction temperatures. U.S. Pat. No. 3,607,918 describes a process for the catalytic dehydrogenation of saturated C.sub.3 -C.sub.5 hydrocarbons with a vapour phase of molecular oxygen at 400.degree.-600.degree. C. In the case of propane as a reaction medium

This game is made as a parody of "Candy Crush Saga" games. If you think the game will play like "candy crush" you're totally wrong. "candy crush" is about flipping the tiles or some simple task to the top and is about no strategy whatsoever. "Tower Defense" is about building traps and placing them to get assistance from your side-scrolling people, like "Candy Crush" games. You must build traps to hold the enemies and traps in your traps. The enemies will move and destroy the traps, just keep building traps and keep your eyes open! If you ever give up, remember that you can just use scrap from traps to upgrade them and form a better strategy and to keep on playing your favorite game! *If you don't use Google Chrome, you cannot see the graphics or play the game! If you don't want to see this ad when you click a button, please click another button, thank you! What is this game about? You are a dr. and surgeon, you have to operate to save one million people. But in the night, around 4-5 AM, a gigantic fire explodes and hides those people behind a wall. Let's save them! What's new:

Today's show is a special one! It has been a long time coming (vaguely inspired by that Charmed reboot) and it's been a while since I have chosen such an obvious top topic. So without further ado... Today we take a look at The Best Pokémon Games. Let's start with the obvious one. Am I right? No? Well then let's carry on shall we? Here are our criteria: I don't limit it to only Game Boy. I don't limit it to only handhelds. Multiple versions or spin-offs don't count as separate games. I'm just here to have some fun. Let me first of all say - this was a hard, hard choice. It's the closest thing I can get to the Nintendo-era, pre-3D handheld console era for the console, so you can be sure I'm not favouring anything made in the modern era. There were big games, like Pokémon Red, Blue or Green if you limit it to 2 and just the 3 games, and then there were the more of the game's brand titles, like Pokémon Stadium, Pokémon Stadium 2, Pokémon Dream World or (of course) the second generation of the games where the evolutions were introduced - Orange version>Yellow version>Blue version>Red version >Green version But I think it's harder to point out two specific games from the older generation. Because I totally picked them! And you can't fault me. My viewing was through a Japanese angle and Pokémon in Japan is the be-all, end-all. I actually had to stop myself from saying that because they are so much more niche than the games in America that are so high on this list. I'm actually extending this list to 3x5ths because that's the years it spans - the original first generation of Pokémon game - the greatest generation-ported generation - then the second generation which, once again, I think was the greatest generation of all time. Pokémon Advance was included but it's just never going to be in a top 10 post at least, the novel is a pretty terrible RPG, and just not as popular as Gameboy in Japan. Honourable mentions go out to Pokémon: Master Quest for the GBA
