Danplace is a small village and civil parish in the Coleraine district, Northern Ireland. It lies along the A2. There are a few religious buildings in Danplace, a Presbyterian church, a Catholic chapel, and a Templeshan Sunday School. History The parish of Danplace dated back some 1750 years. According to tradition, the Reformation was introduced there in the 15th century by George MacDonald of Toward Castle. However one hundred and fifty years later, the Church was restored in 1770. The foundation of Danplace Presbyterian Church of Ireland and the Presbyterian Church of Northern Ireland, was excommunicated by the church of Ireland in 1718 after a Reformation. This caused the Church of Ireland's congregation to form the Presbyterian Church of Northern Ireland in 1779. Church of Ireland Unlike most of north-east Ulster, where St Patrick's Church, Ballymoney was the main centre of the Anglican Church, the parochial church of Danplace was beginning its life only two hundred years ago. The Church of Ireland and St Patrick's Cathedral, Coleraine was composed of five parishes of Danplace, Gormanston, Kilcronaghan, Newtownstewart and Toward Castle. Saint Patrick's Church,

Newtownstewart was a part of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Coleraine. The first Protestant clergyman of the Church of Ireland in Danplace was James Stout. In the 1730s, Protestantism began to take place in Ireland in strongholds like Danplace, regardless of Catholic bishops and clergy. It was strongly encouraged by the "Danplastics", who were strongly backed by the Scottish Presbyterians and Protestants in Ulster who were beginning to be displeased by their rejection of the Church of Ireland. These Conservatives were always showing a stronger interest in the Danplastics than in the majority of other Presbyterians, even when they had been denounced by both political parties. Over half the Presbyterian ministers fled from the Church of Ireland, taking up permanent residence in Scotland. Their fellow countrymen were delighted to hear of their arrival at journey's end, as they had felt left to stand alone. The combination of local Presbyterians and Conservatives was powerful enough to force the Church of Ireland to make a temporary return to Danplace in 1758. Then in July 1763, the church was restored in 1770, which would remain the case until April 27, 1996. Just fifteen years after Danplace had been
