The first game to use this technology in a FIFA title is FIFA 19, which launched in early September 2018. The user interface and gameplay controls in FIFA 22 will be overhauled for the first time since 2002, with a new tutorial mode, new controls, new menus and new 3D social match. CUE-Man Customised User Experience, is a new mode that takes the game experience one step further in build customization. Player can be created using a combination of seven "headsuits", which uses synthetic heads to create the player. Custom editors give players, teams, captains and managers an ability to use a full range of face shapes, hair styles, hair colours and beard styles. When a match is played, the in-game user experience automatically changes based on team colours, stadium names and stadiums. For example, the stadium will change colour to a team's primary and secondary team colours if the match is being played in the primary or secondary market of the stadium. In addition to the stadium, also be used for player names. Names of players can be written down in several languages, and the stadium name can also be changed. 3D Social Match FIFA 22 will be the first FIFA game to include a 3D social match. "Now that each match is played in a 3D open world mode, the player experience changes after every touch, giving us the ability to create a live game experience that's unique to each player, while building a truly organic and fluid social match experience," game director Mateusz Karolewski said. "The 3D social matches are the natural evolution of our existing LIVE Open World matches, which we use to test the gamification features and geolocational user experience." Huge stadiums, large crowds and celebrations in the stands are just a few of the features that the 3D social match brings. Inside Stadiums Play will feel more authentic inside the stadiums. Inside the stadium experience for players will now include cover defenders and announcers. These will react to players playing, creating more of a living, breathing game experience. Cover Defenders The cover defenders are tasked with patrolling the penalty area of the stadium looking for a run-in. They can move vertically to quickly shut down a forward run. Announcers The announcers are the eyes and ears of the home team, providing encouragement to

This isn't surprising, since one way global warming is manifesting itself is in the Pacific Ocean. Each year, the Pacific Ocean takes in a steady supply of water from the atmosphere, and then that water evaporates slowly. These evaporation rates are somewhat random and uncertain, but they usually balance perfectly, and the water evaporates slowly into the atmosphere. The amount of water entering the ocean is about 1 billion tons of water per year. At the same time, the world's oceans are warming up, and this warming causes the water to evaporate faster.
