Although it is not explicitly mentioned that the work also appeared in the Ionian Philological Journal, volume 21, 1972, page 183 and references to its publication are found in other relevant articles, including articles by William S. Jones and R. David. His other works include the poem U Gnozia Tin Ekonomia (On Economics; 1979) and a collection of essays titled Neopagetismos (1995), in which he coined the neopagetismos, referring to the Christian doctrine of a personal eschatological reign of God in the present world. He saw the work as an expression of his own spiritual struggles, which apparently dated from his youth. He has written a series of books under the pen name Jeremiah Eades.
