Q: Require JS - dynamically change the option on a select tag I have some javascript code that changes the value on the select tags. However as the page is loaded some of these tags are empty with the value set to "None". I want to modify the code so that it checks to see if the value is none or is empty, then if it is set to display an alert asking the user to select one of the options. Here is the code: `$(document).ready(function() { $("element").each(function(index) { var elem = $(this); elem.val(elem.attr("data-value")); }); });` So the real question is...how can I modify this code so that it adds an event to check for empty values? A: Set the minlength attribute to ensure that there is at least one value. You could also replace val with: `elem.val(elem.filter(function () { return $.trim(this.value) }).first().attr("data-value"));` which will ensure that the value is actually set (unless it's "None"). If you want the option to be selected, remove the selected attribute.
