challenge: an interprofessional problem-solving focus group. The problem of beverage stability is one that is common to the disciplines of nursing and pharmacy. It has the potential to cause significant healthcare and economic impacts on both patient and provider. The problem of beverage stability is complex and difficult to address and, as a result, there is no comprehensive solution.
This paper reports the findings from an interprofessional focus group of practitioners from the fields of pharmacy, nursing and hospital management. This paper reports the common issues and benefits for each group. Focus groups are widely used to identify the views and opinions of groups of individuals. This study was conducted to explore: what are the problems and benefits of beverage stability in hospitals; what are the problems and benefits of the roles and responsibilities of nurses, pharmacists, and hospital managers; and what are the potential solutions to problems of beverage stability in hospitals. In the focus groups, 25 practitioners from hospital administration, nursing, and pharmacy were interviewed. The focus groups explored the major challenges
