Q: Why does the amount of clothes L is wearing change for the same person at different times? In the movie "Game of Thrones", L seem to wear different clothes at different times. For example, at the beginning of the episode "Oathkeeper", L is wearing a tattered white shirt, then she is wearing a flowery blue dress. Furthermore, we see different types of clothes she is wearing: one at the beginning is a t-shirt and the other is a dress. My question is why does L change her clothes multiple times at the same time? A: It is most likely that this is due to intentional de-cluttering (aka item is "ready to wear") the purpose of this being a warning to other characters that they need to be careful around him. If there is an actual explanation it is probably because this was used on some of the extras as a method of trying to keep the level of de-cluttering consistent to increase realism. Q: Laravel - How to go back to the last data inserted into the DB I want to show a profile of a user (all of the users), after he clicks on the save button. The problem I'm having is that I want to update the data in the database when the user clicks on the save button. I've added this: `$this->user()->save();` I want to update the users profile (the profile image and the profile data). I've gone through the documentation and found this: `DB::table('users')->insert($data);` But I don't know how to do the update. A: Everytime you want to update data in database you need to do something like this: `$user = User::find(auth()->id()); $user->update(array('field1' => value, 'field2' => value,...)); $user->save();` But, if you are asking about updating last data inserted by the user you should use `refresh()` method instead. `$this->user()->refresh();` Q: QT - How to install QT on Windows Platform How can I install QT on a Windows platform?
