Sonic The Hedgehog 3 (c) NintendoÂ® Disorders of hemostasis affect at least 1% of the world's population. Of these disorders, Factor V Leiden and Protein C deficiency are the most common. More than a million people in the United States carry a factor V Leiden mutation, resulting in impaired factor V function with a concentration of thrombin generation that is less than normal. There is a 30 to 40 percent risk of unprovoked venous thrombosis (bleeding into the legs) in persons with homozygous factor V Leiden, and a 22 to 24 percent risk in heterozygotes. Hemophilia is also known as “the clotting disease” because of the central role of Factor VIII or Factor IX in the final common path of thrombin generation. Protein C is a vitamin K dependent plasma protein which has important anticoagulant activity. Deficiency of Protein C results in enhanced activation of Factor VII, throm 6d1f23a050
