[8] In those limited circumstances in which the judge determines that the credibility of a witness who has testified about the statement is essential to the defense, this is the only way of preserving the defendant's right to confront the witness. For example, a defendant who admits to making a statement implicating him in a crime and who asserts a defense of imperfect self-defense (People v. Aaron (1989) 215 Cal.App.3d 18, 23 [264 Cal.Rptr. 597]), or who offers an alibi defense (People v. Kanos (1974) 39 Cal.App.3d 644, 648 [114 Cal.Rptr. 397]), or who claims that the statement was made under duress (People v. Barker, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 720) would be entitled to confront the witness about the statement, at least if "cross-examining the c6a93da74d
