I'm unable to close the activex from code, rather than the form. This in the linkbutton: Response.Redirect("Thankyou.aspx?ThankYou=yes"); This is in the onclick: Screen("Thankyou.aspx", "Welcome" + txtID); It's a.net custom control, so I can't really close it from within the Active X control. I've tried: Screen("Thankyou.aspx?ThankYou=yes"); and: Screen("Thankyou.aspx", "Welcome" + txtID); no luck. Any ideas? A: You can use the Kill method of the UserControl instead of Screen: Kill(tpMainForm.ActiveControl); see UserControl.Kill Method. Sunday, May 16, 2017 "If you deserve to be called God's children, then you are." (John 8:34). Then Jesus said, "Truly I say to you, unless you are born again, you will never see the kingdom of heaven." (John 3:3). And we are to seek the kingdom first and then our righteousness, not the other way around. "The kingdom of heaven may be compared to a man who seeks to find his roof-beams. He sees the roof-beams from some distance and continues his search. He realizes that he has found the roof-be
