A University of Leeds PhD student, Amanda Barnes is a native speaker of modern British English. She has a keen interest in current linguistic theories and approaches and has previously worked as an examiner for Cambridge and IELTS. She is also an editorial consultant for the Cambridge Academic Content Assessment. IELTS teacher Dave Mills is a co-author of Cambridge English Grammar in Use and Cambridge University Press's 'Teaching Grammar' series.

He is also a doctoral researcher on the Universities of Nottingham and Warwick, where he lectures on Practical English as a Foreign Language. He is currently a TESOL trainer and has taught IELTS since 1992. Marcia Watson, a teacher trainer for CBE (Cambridge Board Examiners), has worked in education and training for over 20 years. She has recently completed a PhD in Applied Linguistics at De Montfort University and lectures at the University of Leicester. The Cambridge Grammar of the English Language is the first rigorous grammar of English that adopts a linguistic functionalist perspective. It is the only recent grammar to integrate the latest developments in English grammar, including transformational grammar, syntactic theory and corpus-informed descriptive linguistics. Esther White is a prolific academic, visiting professor and TESOL trainer. She has received a BA from Cambridge University, a postgraduate diploma in Linguistics from the University of Leeds and a PhD from Lancaster University, where she investigated the relationship between first language and second language grammar. She has published numerous articles and books, and holds several honorary doctorates. Her most recent publications include, from Longman, a two-volume study of the grammar of conditional sentences; Cambridge English Grammar, with Nigel Roche, a new Cambridge handbook of English grammar; and, from CUP, a revised, expanded and completely reformatted edition of English grammar: Cambridge English Grammar. 5ec8ef588b
