the screenplay of cinta was written by aidil mardani and antara kamal, who came up with the original plot during a month-long travel to the masai mara in western kenya. according to the director, the plot of the movie was inspired by the wakati wa muziki (the time when music is the only music) period in the masai culture where no music was prohibited. however, when the film was completed, it was aimed for the general audience, and the premise was so exciting that it made the masai mara more accessible to the kina surabaya (ksm) and moviegoers alike. antara kamal and aidil mardani did not use modern technology for their first film, although they have experimented with some of these formats by making the first aadc2 trailer in the year before the film is released. however, it was not possible to make a big trailer like that. that day, antara kamal's phone rang while he was watching trailers and movies. he saw a trailer of cinta when he still thought that a normal and simple short movie is still being made. he called up the writer and told him not to worry because they would get many people to support the short movie. the director said that the first thing he did was to decide the cost and location of the work. only then did he get some information about the budget, leading to his eventual participation. the movie script and the costumes are simple and made especially for the movie. every detail is in accordance with the theme of the film, including the scenery and production company. this makes the movie look real and is a major component of the film's success. the location of the film is also another important component to cinta. among indonesian reggae, the scenery is a rich source of inspiration, and this is definitely a part of cinta.
