every character in the alphabet represents a particular sound. this is the system that is used to write chinese characters. in most cases, the chinese characters are not all that different from their english counterparts. many english characters retain the same sound as in chinese. for example, the english letter

'a' is pronounced a in english, even though it is written with a character. the chinese character for the letter 'a' is pronounced 'a' in chinese, even though it is written with a different character. the chinese characters for the letter 'a' are pronounced 'a' in chinese, even though they are written with a different character. these are the most common radicals in chinese that have been formed in the earliest chinese characters. each of these radicals has a meaning. for example, the circle is related to heaven and the sun. the triangle and the square are related to the earth and the moon. the lines, which can also represent water and mountains, represent the sky and other celestial bodies. a few of the radicals represent other things, such as the tree.

the animal radicals are still there today. some radicals have remained the same for thousands of years. in the past, each character was also composed of a few basic strokes (short lines). in ancient times, these basic strokes were called radicals. if youre a visual learner, the best way to learn a language is to create a visual model of the language. for example, if youre learning the chinese alphabet, trace the characters in the soil or with chalk. while saying the letter out loud, walk on the lines you have just traced. in this way, you write the letter by moving your whole body! 5ec8ef588b
