It's been a bad day for Android security. ZDNet reports that a number of Android antivirus apps, including the one from Google itself, are sending out spam messages to users' inboxes. While the issue has been fixed, it's yet another embarrassment for an industry already suffering from a rise in fake Google apps. Avast Antivirus sees you posting on social sites and 'Friends' features on the interface so how do you protect yourself from hackers and malware? I know it is possible to root an Android smartphone and get access to a system file so how do you be sure that you don't find yourself on a virus laden app? I have a Mac and am an Android user, I believe that since it is rooted it is even possible to get in? Due to the fact that the smartphone security is so important, it is really good to get your smartphone having an antivirus software which can defend you against all the malwares which are really harmful to your smartphone as well as your all information. Avast is one of the best android antivirus software which has a number of useful and effective features which I highly recommend you to get access to as it is very easy to use. Another year, another Android antivirus app spam. This time, Avast antimalware, which is part of Avast's mobile antivirus lineup, made it into a spamstorm. The issue affected just about all Avast users, but the real trouble started when complaints started to pour in online. It looked like Avast users were getting email spam from Avast's own free antivirus phone app. Security writer Kurt Opsahl said on ZDNet last week that "The results of a Google search for Android antispysware currently returns Avast Mobile Security Antivirus app description. It is not only a paid app, but also falsely says to be an antispysware app. At this moment I can't find any official statement from Avast about the issue." One thing that is quite clear is that this is a mistake.

Android is the fastest growing platform in mobile technology. However, only a minority of Android devices are protected by antivirus software. By 2015, over half of Android users were still unprotected, and the situation is only getting worse. Avast, which releases Android security updates every week, is the most popular Android antivirus, but Android antivirus applications are growing faster than Avast's. Most new Android antivirus apps that start out are free but then dig in and jack up the price. Not good. Security software is a useful tool that protects a computer from being infected with a virus, Trojan horse and other attacks. However, many security programs also block the access to your personal data and documents by removing the data files after scanning them. Don't worry, it is not hard to recover deleted file data. All you have to do is to use file recovery program. You just need to go to the Serial Number. If the result is empty, it is probably because you have selected an incorrect or corrupt drive. Please check this and try again. If it still does not work, please contact the manufacturer of your antivirus software for support and additional instructions. Antivirus detection of malicious codes is another useful feature of Antivirus. If you don't know what is a harmful file, you can use Antivirus' Tools or it will detect your files and malicious codes, this feature is useful. If you want to get your deleted files back, use the right way in the first place, it can save you a lot of time. How to use: 5ec8ef588b
