I have a Windows Server 2012 R2 Standard, which has a minimum license requirement of 5 CALs. I purchased 5 and they told me they'd give me an email to confirm I'd purchased the correct license, but then it was not confirmed. When I went to the tech support site to find out why it wasn't confirmed, they told me I only have 500 CALs to begin with, and that I should try out the service and if I liked it to purchase more. This is not acceptable. I need 5 CALs. I have been repeatedly trying to purchase more but the Microsoft site is not allowing me to because they say I have 500 CALs as per the Microsoft site. I have to purchase another 5 CALs, and they are not allowing me to buy more. I bought 500 CALs because I thought that would be enough for a year, but that isn't even close to being enough. How can I get this straightened out? I am trying to license my Windows Server 2012 R2 Standard and I keep getting an error that says I do not have enough licenses for that server. I have 3 windows CALs, but when I try to buy more I get an error that says I have already have enough. I do not understand what to do to get the additional licenses. I do not want to have to purchase another server. If I need to purchase another server, I would prefer to do that, but my current server shouldn't need more licenses. Can you please give me a solution? I have purchased Windows Server 2016 RDS for a couple of environments. The license is keyed on the user name or domain user's CAL, and we are using RBAC. I am currently in the process of rolling the licenses to the new systems. One of the methods I was considering was bulk licensing across a set of 10 user CALs. I enabled the 10-user Windows Server 2016 RDS license and used the Snap-in to check the licenses in each user CAL. I am getting the same license count across all the user CALs, and the status is Automatic. I am not sure if the user has a single CAL or if they have ten CALs. Does this mean that I only get 10 user CALs with Windows Server 2016 RDS? What about other licensing options? I do not have any extra CALs and I do not want to purchase another server.

Windows Server 2012 R2 is an advanced version of the 2012 edition. It provides several advantages. The Licensing Manager offers a more intelligent user interface that makes it easier to determine the license and configuration information for each server. The RDS is installed on the server running the RDS Administration Server (RDSMS), which communicates with the Client Access Licensing Server (CALMS) and with the Windows Remote Desktop Session Host (RDSH) servers. The RDS is required to meet the users' requests. They use remote desktops or Windows applications to work without the limitations of their computer. Both the RDS and the Client Access Licensing Server (CALMS) must be deployed on the same server and license pool. Finally, you may have to ensure that your server is set up for RDS licensing. After a RDS Server license has been purchased, it can only be activated on a server that is on the license server group, on a server that is joined to an enterprise domain, and on the server where RDS is running. You can manually set the RDS service to start using the Services snap-in. For more information, see "How to Turn on RDS Service". As mentioned above, the RDS service requires a CAL license that enables connectivity to the licensed user's desktop from a remote access session. This service may be configured by using the RDS roles and features as well as the client settings for the remote user desktop. You can also do this using the RDS Management Shell. The RDS server responds to remote logons or management requests from any of these methods. To do this, you can use the Login-RSRDS cmdlet to enable a Remote Desktop Session Host service. 5ec8ef588b
